Bees Eaten for Revenge.

Bees are usually employed as manufacturers of honey, which is everywhere considered a delicious food, but there are places where the bees themselves serve as a food.

The negroes of Guiana, when stung by a bee, proceed to catch as many as they can and in revenge eat them. It would be interesting to know what happens as an effect of the sting thus taken internally.

In Ceylon the natives hold a torch under the bee swarm hanging to a tree, catch them as they drop, then carry them home, boil them and eat them.—Popular Science Monthly.

TASK OF LASKER VERY DIFFICULT

CHICAGOAN MADE HEAD OF THE SHIPPING BOARD KNOWS HE FACES BIG PROBLEMS.

POSITION A THANKLESS ONE

Labor Troubles Must Be Settled and Some Plan Devised for Successful Competition With the Ships of Other Nations.

By EDWARD B. CLARK.

Washington.—A new chief of the United States shipping board has been appointed. A. D. Lasker, a business man of Chicago, has been given the job. It hurts nothing to say that it is a hard job and one which politicians did not fall over themselves in an attempt to seize upon for some friend.

It looks today as if within a year or two the United States will get out of the shipping business. It probably will dispose of its holdings and let private ownership go back on the job. This is the suggestion which seems to have authority behind it, but it will take a long time before the end sought, if it is to be sought, can be reached.

The shipping board has had trouble of one kind or another ever since it was established in the early days of the war. Men have come and men have gone, but the trouble has stuck. Somebody said that the board was hoodooed as some ships are said to be. Perhaps it was not properly christened, or as some flippant one has said, perhaps an old-time kind of bottle was not broken on the day of its launching.

The senate has voted an additional $75,000,000 to carry on the work of the shipping board. This sum is plus the first appropriation. It is not definitely decided yet, because of opposition in the house to granting this additional money.

Knows What Confronts Him.

Mr. Lasker has no illusions. He knows that he will have trouble to carry the shipping board's operations through to high success and he knows that generally speaking the position has been regarded as a thankless one.

It is said in Washington that the draft law, metaphorically speaking, went into effect again when the President named the members of the shipping board. In other words, he was compelled to bring men to him and to tell them that it was their duty to accept the positions which were offered.

This may not be quite true, but the correspondents in Washington knew perfectly well that the President was having great difficulty in finding a man whom he considered a proper one for the high place on the board, and was having some considerable difficulty in finding men for the minor memberships. The finally chosen one was in Washington several times for conferences with the President before he said "I'll take it."

The new appointee is said to be a good business man, but it is known that he is no sailor. However, a sailor is not needed for this shipping board job. A man with a hard hand and a hard head is needed. The fact that Mr. Lasker has shown so clearly that he knows the difficulties which are ahead of him does not discount them, and simply says in effect "I'll try," may mean that he has the hard hand and the hard head necessary to put the job over.

Some of the Board's Problems.

Of course it is too early to determine definitely what the policy of the new shipping board will be, but among other things that it will have to do will be the settlement of a lot of labor troubles, the adoption of some plan which will enable the American ships to compete successfully with foreign ships, and the solution of other problems which confront the country's shipping interests.

The government has put something like three billions of dollars into its fleet of ships. It is said that they will sell today for only about three-quarters of a billion. The reason for the decrease is not that the ships have deteriorated, but the unsettled conditions in the world.

A plan has been suggested by which the shipping board would turn the vessels over to private corporations to have them run the ships at a certain price fixed on the tonnage. It is held that perhaps the government would make more money this way than in any other, but probably, it is said, this prospective income, if the course were adopted, would not take care of the deficit.

For a great many years in congress there have been advocates of a plan for subsidizing the American merchant marine. This always has been fought vigorously by the opponents of government subsidies in any form. Of course in a sense the government has been subsidizing its merchant marine since the shipping board was established, but the venture was gone into as a war measure. It is said by a great many shipping men that the merchant marine cannot enter into competition with foreign vessels unless some means is taken to reduce operating expenses.

Daddy's Evening Fairy Tale

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

HOSPITALITY HOTEL.

The boy and the girl mounted the horses which Master Thoughtfulness had waiting for them outside the little soda water shop. Then Master Thoughtfulness mounted his horse.

"Now we're off," he called. "We're off for the Hospitality Hotel."

The horses seemed to want to gallop and run. They seemed to want to hurry.

"They know where we're going," said Master Thoughtfulness to the boy and girl adventurers. "They know they're going to the stables which belong to the Hospitality Hotel. And, too, they're carrying us along at a good rate."

"When will we get to the House of Secrets?" asked the boy.

"You mustn't think, Master Thoughtfulness," he continued, "that we're not enjoying our journey, for we are! I never believed I could have as many adventures as I've had, but I am anxious, awfully anxious, to get to the House of Secrets, where our questions will be answered. I want to know how I can become a great leader of boys and men; how I can be important and great."

"And I want to know how I can be a great leader of girls and women," said the girl. "I am longing to know what they're going to tell me at the House of Secrets."

"We're in the valley which is famous for the Hospitality Hotel," said Master Thoughtfulness. "When you pass through this valley and have gone over the next steep hill which you must climb then you will be in the valley where the House of Secrets stands."

"We're getting nearer and nearer," said the boy. "I do hope we won't get on any wrong paths."

"I don't think you will," said Master Thoughtfulness. "For if adventurers keep to the main road this far along the way to the House of Secrets, even if they may have missed it and gone off at times, they'll not lose their way now."

"Wide Open Doorway."

"Oh, I see the Hospitality Hotel," said the girl.

The boy looked, too, and so did Master Thoughtfulness. All of a sudden many lights had been lighted, and now it seemed no longer dark, but only a few scattered stars in the sky, but the whole valley seemed a-glitter and a-gleam with light.

"They're all ready for us," said Master Thoughtfulness.

The horses hurried even more quickly along the road, and then they stopped before a great hotel. There were turrets and towers and wings and bridges leading from some parts to other parts, and there were verandas and little roof gardens on some of the low roofs of the wings. These, too, were lighted up with lanterns, and every door, every window of the hotel seemed to be open. And at every door stood lots and lots of little brownie people.

"Welcome, welcome, welcome!" they all shouted. The boy and the girl called back:

"Thank you, thank you! We're glad to be here."

"That we are," added Master Thoughtfulness.

The horses neighed excitedly.

"Which door will we go in?" asked the boy.

"They're all wide open," said the girl.

"Any one at all," said Master Thoughtfulness. "The people of the Hospitality Hotel like to be ready at every door. They never want to say:

"Oh, I didn't expect you this way and so I'm afraid you'll have to come at another time, or at least through another door." They're always ready here!"

The boy and girl followed Master Thoughtfulness in through a great wide-open doorway. All around stood little brownie people laughing and bowing and shouting welcome as they threw the brown caps which they carried high into the air.

"We will now have the banquet!" shouted one.

"The banquet, the banquet!" they all said.

And there appeared in a moment, it seemed, many more brownies carrying trays for the great Hospitality Hotel banquet.

Out of Date Now.

"Did you hear what that young woman said?"

"No. What was it?"

"She told the young fellow with her that she 'just loved to cook.'"

"Ah! An old-fashioned girl. She's using the 'vamping' methods popular twenty years ago."

OUR LARGEST MUNICIPAL PIER

CHICAGO'S municipal pier, one of the largest and most useful public structures, is likewise one of the stupendous engineering feats of the times. It not only provides 8,500 feet of dockage space and more than 450,000 square feet of freight storage space, but is also a magnet of enormous proportions for recreational purposes.

This great structure juts out into Lake Michigan for 3,000 feet and is 292 feet wide. In its construction there were used 20,000 piling, 1,500,000 cubic yards of sand and clay and 50,000 cubic feet of re-inforced concrete; 80 cars of steel sash and doors and 80,000 window panes. Although sub-divided into a headhouse (the shore end), a freight-and-passenger section, a terminal building and a recreational section, it is all under one roof.

Street cars ascend an incline to the second floor and run out to the terminal building. Foot traffic is accommodated by 16-foot-wide board walks, 2,340 feet long, reaching out to the recreation end of the building.

In addition to spacious waiting and rest rooms, there is a hospital, restaurant, art room, auditorium—used for dancing, concerts and banquets,—and a roof garden.

SALT IS REQUIRED BY COWS

Give Only Small Quantity on Feed and Permit Animal to Lick Rock Salt in Boxes.

Salt is required by all animals. The dairy cow requires an ounce or more a day, say specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture, and while she should be given all she needs, she should not be forced to take more than she wants. It is best, therefore, to give only a small quantity on the feed, and to place rock salt in boxes in the yard where she can lick it at will.
